Overview

Digital transformation of healthcare over recent years, which has accelerated since COVID-19 is linked to security risks. Transmitting health information and maintaining patient records digitally is now a mainstay of the industry – but these advances in technology also present opportunities for patient safety and privacy to be compromised.

As the healthcare sector continues to offer life-critical services while working to improve treatment and patient care with new technologies, criminals and cyber threat actors look to exploit the vulnerabilities that are coupled with these changes. The cyber threat landscape continues to expand rapidly. With each passing day, the cyberattacker ranks grow larger, as does their level of sophistication and the number of entities they target.

Entities need an incident response plan to combat future incidents so that they can protect their business reputation and care delivery operations against malicious activity.

What It's About

This event is designed to identify different risk scenarios and prepare healthcare entities for cyber threats. It's an activity to evaluate effectiveness of entity's incident response and communication plan with the help of simulated incident response scenarios.

The core objectives of exercise are:

- Practice technical skills in no-fault environment
- Train coordination and complex response measures to cyber incidents
- Practice communication and information sharing with counterparts
- Gain deeper understanding of the technical, political, strategic, diplomatic and legal contexts
- Practice decision making process and procedures

Who Should Attend?

This event is for healthcare leaders as well as technical, risk and compliance teams who are responsible for mitigating the risks to patients and the healthcare institution.

- Strategy and Management
